What makes a good rechargeable flashlight?

Brightness and battery life are the two most important factors for a rechargeable flashlight, and we were satisfied with both during our tests. If you're worried that it's too dim with a maximum 400 lumens compared to 1,000 lumens from the Nitecore we recommend as overall best, the gap isn't actually that big.

Are rechargeable flashlights better than disposable batteries?

Rechargeable flashlights are better than those using disposable batteries for two main reasons: they are more powerful and better for the environment. To find the best rechargeable flashlights, we tested 16 models in our lab, evaluating them on usage, brightness, beam distance, and other features.

How bright is the Megastream USB rechargeable EDC flashlight?

The MegaStream USB rechargeable EDC flashlight is extremely bright, delivering 1,800 lumens and 26,000 candela. It fits conveniently in your pocket or clips to your gear, and its battery pack can be charged inside or outside of the light. Full product information can be found in the DOCUMENTATION section.

Can you use a rechargeable flashlight as a backup light?

Yes, you can use a rechargeable flashlight as an extra or backup light. We recommend bringing one when camping or hiking, and keeping one in your car or bag for emergencies. Many rechargeable flashlights also have an SOS mode and strobe lights, which are essential in an emergency.

What features did you test in the rechargeable flashlights?

To find the best rechargeable flashlights, we tested 16 models from various brands in our lab, evaluating them on usage, brightness, beam distance, and other features. Rechargeable flashlights beat out flashlights that use disposable batteries because they are more powerful and better for the environment.

What are the different types of rechargeable flashlights?

Most rechargeable flashlights come with basic high, low, and medium modes. Some models have added brightness modes like ultra-high, ultra-low, turbo light, strobe light, or SOS settings.
